Animal Services

What is your dog trying to tell you?

Being a responsible dog owner means making sure your pet knows how to behave around people and other dogs. Just like people, dogs use facial expressions, posture, and other body language to communicate with people and other dogs. A lot of canine communication consists of barks, whines and growls, so it's important to know what dog sounds mean. More often, though, dogs rely on nonverbal body language. Understanding that is key when it comes to effectively communicating and understanding your dog or other dogs. To learn more, visit georgina.ca/AnimalServices.
